Copy trading is an investment strategy that automatically replicates the real-time trades of an experienced investor into your own brokerage account. It is a form of social trading, allowing less-experienced traders to benefit from the market knowledge of seasoned professionals.

How copy trading works?

Copy trading involves two main parties: the signal provider and the copier.

Signal Provider (or "Leader"): An experienced trader who performs market analysis and executes trades. They agree to have their trades automatically broadcast to followers on a copy trading platform.*

Copier: An investor who follows a signal provider. After setting the amount of capital they wish to invest, their account automatically executes the exact same trades as the signal provider, proportionally adjusting the trade size based on the allocated funds.*

The copier retains control and can close copied trades or disconnect from the provider at any time. Signal providers are typically compensated through subscription fees or a rebate on spreads.

Benefits of copy trading

Accessible for beginners

New traders can participate in financial markets without needing extensive knowledge or experience in market analysis

Saves time

Experienced investors who lack the time to actively monitor the markets can still manage their investments by copying others

Portfolio diversification

Copiers can diversify their portfolios by following different traders who specialize in various markets, such as forex, crypto, or stocks

Learning opportunity

It provides a way to learn about trading strategies by observing the decisions of successful traders
